Professor of English and Interim Dean of the College of Arts and Science, Patricia Okker has been at the University of Missouri since 1990. She previously served as Senior Associate Provost and as Chair of the English Department. She earned her BA from Allegheny College, an MA from the University of Georgia, and her PhD from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign.

Prof. Okker’s research and teaching focus on nineteenth-century American periodicals and women’s writing. She is the author of one book on nineteenth-century American women editors and another on serialized fiction. She also edited a collection of essays on transnationalism and serial fiction. Former president of the Research Society for American Periodicals, she has served as reviewer and panelist for the National Endowment of the Humanities and has been a recipient of a William T. Kemper Fellowship for Teaching Excellence and a Faculty-Alumni Award from the Mizzou Alumni Association.
